In this conference, we shall try to demonstrate the value of non-conventional medicine in general and of homeopathic medicine in particular within public health organizations in developed and developing countries. We shall first give an explanation of what we mean by «non conventional medicine» and by «public health». Then we shall give a rapid historical review of human health behavior from Antiquity until the present. We shall try to demonstrate the advantages and disadvantages of non-conventional medicine and give the experimental and clinical research basis that led us to the conclusion that non-conventional medicine has major potential for human health in general, and especially for developing countries and precarious situations.
